Whom do you trust?

There's a story about a kitten that fell into a well. A number of people gathered around the well, including a young boy and his dad. Everyone was wondering how they could rescue the kitten, since it was about 20 feet down to the water. It became obvious that someone would have to be lowered into the well to save the kitten.

One person got a rope, then looked around for a volunteer. "Who's willing to go down there?" he asked. It would have to be a small person.

After a few moments of thinking it over, the young boy spoke up, "I'll go," he said, "if my father holds the rope."
